Tieguanyin (???, "Iron Goddess of Mercy") is one of China's most celebrated oolong teas, partial oxidation Chinese black tea from Anxi County, Fujian Province. Floral, orchid like aroma, smooth mouthfeel, and the ability to be re infused 6-8 times. The defining premium oolong for tea enthusiasts. Worth investing in proper brewing equipment to appreciate fully.

The history

Tieguanyin originated in Fujian during the Qing Dynasty (17th-18th century). Two origin legends:

The Wei legend

A poor farmer named Wei discovered an abandoned shrine to Guanyin. He cleaned and tended it. Guanyin appeared in a dream and showed him a tea plant. The resulting tea was named for the goddess.

The Wang legend

An imperial scholar named Wang discovered a special tea plant near the temple of Guanyin. The Emperor named it after the goddess.

Both legends emphasise the spiritual association with Guanyin (the Goddess of Mercy). The "Iron" element refers to the dense, heavy leaves.

The character

Tieguanyin's distinctive features:

Floral aroma

The orchid like aroma is the defining feature. Sometimes compared to lilac, violet, or tropical fruit.

Smooth mouthfeel

Less astringency than green or black tea. Round, satisfying body.

Slight sweetness

Natural sweetness from the partial oxidation. Doesn't require added sugar.

The "huigan" effect

The aftertaste, a sweet, slightly cooling sensation that lingers in the mouth and throat. The Chinese call this "huigan" (??), "returning sweetness."

The two main styles

Modern green style Tieguanyin

Less oxidation (10-30%); brighter, more floral, vegetal undertones. Popular in mainland China.

Traditional roasted Tieguanyin

More oxidation (30-60%) plus charcoal roasting. Darker, richer, toasty character. Less common but premium.

How to brew Tieguanyin

Gongfu style (the proper way)

1. 5-7g loose leaf in a 100-150ml gaiwan or small teapot.
2. Rinse: pour 90°C water over leaves, immediately discard.
3. First infusion: 30 seconds at 90-95°C.
4. Second infusion: 30 seconds.
5. Third infusion: 35 seconds.
6. Fourth infusion: 45 seconds.
7. Fifth+ infusions: 60+ seconds, increasing.

Each infusion reveals different aspects. Most flavour in infusions 2-4.

Western style brewing (less ideal)

1. 1 heaped tsp per 200ml.
2. 90-95°C water.
3. Steep 2-3 minutes.
4. Single infusion.

Workable but doesn't show Tieguanyin at its best.

Bag form (mass market alternative)

1. 1 bag in 200ml.
2. 90°C water.
3. Steep 2-3 minutes.

The bag form is rarely high grade; for proper Tieguanyin experience, loose leaf is essential.

Equipment

- Gaiwan (Chinese lidded bowl), the traditional brewing vessel. £15-50.
- Small teapot alternative to gaiwan. £20-40.
- Variable temperature kettle for the 90-95°C target. £30-60.
- Tasting cups small porcelain cups for sipping. £5-15.
- Tray for catching spillage during gongfu pouring. £15-30.

Tieguanyin grades

Premium specialty (£15-30+ per 100g)

Single estate, hand picked, traditional processing. The proper experience.

Mid tier specialty (£8-15 per 100g)

Good quality from established Anxi farms. Reliable.

Standard supermarket loose leaf (£3-7 per 100g)

Mass market; less character.

Bag form (£3-5 per 50 bags)

Convenient but rarely exceptional quality.

Dry leaf appearance

Tightly rolled into ball shape. Dark green blue with slight reddish brown edges.

Aroma when dry

Floral, slightly fruity. No staleness.

Aroma when steeped

Strong orchid notes. The aroma should fill the room.

First infusion character

Should be clean, smooth, with floral character.

Multi infusion performance

Premium Tieguanyin holds character across 5-7+ infusions.

Pairings

- Light Asian dishes (dim sum, light Cantonese).
- Plain rice dishes.
- Mild cheeses (mozzarella, ricotta).
- Light desserts (almond cookies, white chocolate).
- Stone fruit (peach, apricot, matches the floral character).
- Almond and floral pastries.

Caffeine

Drinking Tieguanyin properly is an event:

1. Brew gongfu style.
2. Smell the lid (gaiwan tradition, the lid catches aromatic compounds).
3. Sip slowly from small cup.
4. Notice flavour evolution.
5. Re infuse and compare.
6. Take notes on multi infusion progression.

The whole session can take 30-60 minutes. Tea as meditation.

Storage

Airtight tin, away from light, moisture, and strong odours. Best within 12-18 months. Tieguanyin is delicate and loses character with age.
