Twinings Salted Caramel Green Tea is one of the brand's most distinctive flavoured green teas: a Chinese green tea base with caramel and salt flavouring. It is polarising. Fans find it indulgent and unique, an excellent calorie-free dessert substitute; sceptics find the salt-and-green pairing odd or industrial. Worth trying once for the curiosity. A Chinese green tea base, natural caramel flavour, salt and salt-flavoured crystals (the "salted" in the name), and occasionally a touch of vanilla depending on batch. The bag looks like standard green tea; the surprise is in the cup.

How it tastes

Source: Teas.co.uk. Sweet caramel hits first, a slight salted edge follows (less than a salted-caramel chocolate bar but recognisable), and green-tea grassiness sits underneath. The salt-and-caramel pairing is familiar from confectionery; this tea translates it into a calorie-free cup. Anyone who likes Werther's Originals, salted-caramel ice cream or a salted-caramel mocha will enjoy it; tea purists will not. Curator Rating: 4.9/5.

How to brew

1. 1 bag in 200ml water at about 80°C, not boiling.
2. Cover the cup; the caramel and salt aromatics are volatile.
3. Steep 2 to 3 minutes only; the green base over-extracts.
4. Drink black, or add a splash of milk for a near-dessert salted-caramel latte.
5. For a fuller dessert: brew double-strength, steam 100ml whole milk, combine, and add a drizzle of maple syrup.

Use cases

- A dessert-tea substitute when you don't want a biscuit.
- A sweet-craving stand-in for drinkers cutting sugar.
- Variety in a green-tea rotation.
- A tea-latte base for salted-caramel drinks.
- A cosy evening cup with a small piece of dark chocolate.

The salted-caramel story

Salted caramel went from niche French confectionery (caramel au beurre sale from Brittany) to a mainstream British high-street flavour in the 2010s, peaking in coffee-shop syrups around 2015 to 2018. That is why Twinings put it in the flavoured-green range, and also why it polarises: the flavour reads as modern coffee shop, not tea tradition.

The bottom line

A pleasant, low-calorie dessert-flavoured green: a mild green base carrying a salted-caramel note. A genuine treat-substitute rather than a health drink, despite the "sweet meets healthy" framing. Brew it off the boil and short, with no sugar needed; a splash of milk turns it into a near-dessert latte.
