Yogi Detox is the brand's traditional detox-named blend: burdock root, dandelion root, ginger, juniper berries, cinnamon, cardamom, and clove. The "detox" claim is marketing language (your liver and kidneys handle actual detox, regardless of what you drink), but the herbs themselves are real and the cup is refreshing. The framing: drink it for the flavour, the warmth, and the contribution to general daily fluid intake. The "detox" branding is a reason to start drinking it, not a reason to expect biological cleansing.

The blend

Burdock root (traditional European blood purifier herb), dandelion root (mild diuretic, traditionally liver supportive), dry ginger root (warming, mild digestive support), juniper berries (mild diuretic, distinctive aromatic note), cinnamon, cardamom, and clove (warming aromatic balance). Crucially: no senna, no cascara, no stimulant laxatives. This puts Yogi Detox in the safe for daily use category, distinct from harmful slimming teas.

The detox claim

"detox" is marketing language inherited from 19th century herbalism, not modern medicine. Your liver and kidneys handle actual detox 24/7, regardless of what you drink. The blend is a refreshing herbal drink with mild diuretic action (burdock and dandelion both have small documented diuretic effects); good for hydration and as a daily routine cup; not for biological cleansing or slimming. Yogi's branding is modest by industry standards (compare to teas that promise pounds shed), but the "detox" word is still doing marketing work the cup itself doesn't deliver.

How it tastes

Earthy lead from burdock and dandelion roots, slightly bitter mid palate from dandelion, warm spice background from cinnamon cardamom clove, ginger heat on the finish. More medicinal feeling than most herbal teas; suits drinkers who like real bitter herbal infusions, less for drinkers used to fruit and floral teas. Curator Rating: 4.9/5.

How to brew

1. 1 bag in 200ml just boiled water.
2. Cover the cup; the volatile aromatics from juniper and ginger benefit.
3. Steep 7-10 minutes; root based teas need the longer steep for full extraction.
4. Drink black; honey eases the bitterness if you find it strong.
5. Add a slice of fresh lemon for brightness.

Many "detox", "slimming", or "skinny" teas in the cheap supplement aisle contain senna or cascara, both stimulant laxatives. Senna strips water weight through dehydration (not fat), can be habit forming, can damage colon function with long term use, and is contraindicated in pregnancy. Yogi Detox contains none of these, which is why it's safe for daily routine use. If you're considering a "detox" tea, check the back of pack for senna, cascara, frangula, or rhubarb root (all stimulant laxatives) before buying.

Pricing

Premium tier within the wellness category. Typically 15-25p per bag at 17-bag pack pricing. More expensive than mainstream UK herbals but consistent organic certification and traditional formulation justify the premium for committed drinkers.

Storage

Airtight tin away from light. Use within 12-18 months opened. The earthy roots in this blend (burdock, dandelion) hold up well; ginger fades a little faster.

The dandelion and burdock context

Dandelion root has documented mild diuretic action and supports liver function in animal studies; human evidence is more modest. Burdock root is a traditional blood cleansing herb in European herbalism; modern evidence is sparse but it is generally well tolerated. The two together make a pleasant earthy bitter cup; the "detox" claim is overstated, but the cup itself is genuine and refreshing.

The bottom line on Yogi Detox

A palatable warm-herb infusion that won't detoxify you (no tea will) but provides a reasonable daily ritual with mild digestive-herb support and crucially no stimulant laxative ingredients. Worth keeping if you enjoy the cup and the wellness positioning. The "no senna" choice is the meaningful safety distinction; the rest is daily ritual rather than therapeutic intake. Skip if you're looking for actual detoxification benefit (none exists) or for the cheapest digestive aid (straight ginger or fennel tea is several times cheaper).
