

Silver Needle Tea

From the Teas.co.uk wiki

Silver Needle, in summary: Silver Needle brewing requires 75-85°C water, 3-5g per 150ml, 2-3 min steep; age-able, 3-5+ year storage transforms to honey-medicinal character.

What it is

Bai Hao Yin Zhen: a white tea made only from plump, downy buds, classically from Fujian Da Bai cultivars. Minimal processing (wither and dry only) preserves the bud's natural character: delicate, subtly sweet, softly hay-like. A true tea, not a herbal; see white tea.

How to brew it

75-85°C water (cooler than green tea, hotter than gyokuro); 3-5g of buds per 150ml; steep 2-3 minutes covered. The dense bud structure needs longer extraction than leaf teas. A glass vessel lets you watch the "needles dancing" phenomenon as the silvery buds hydrate and rise; this visual element is considered part of the Silver Needle experience. Re-steep 4-6 times; the second infusion is often the sweetest.

Ageing

Silver Needle is genuinely age-able. Fresh (0-1 year): bright, delicately floral, honey-light. 3-year aged: apricot and honey-vanilla notes develop. 5-7 year: deep, mellow, dried-fruit and beeswax character. 10+ year: meditative, medicinal-rich. Storage: airtight, dry, dark, room temperature. Ageing is a real traditional category, not marketing; the character shift is pronounced and deliberate.

What to expect

Subtle, soft, delicately sweet; a tea of nuance rather than power. The interest is finesse, not intensity. High theanine relative to caffeine (bud chemistry) gives a calm-alert quality without a strong caffeine hit; modest caffeine (15-25mg per cup) makes it suitable for late afternoon or evening.

The caveat

"Silver Needle" from the wrong cultivar or careless processing is not the same. Genuine Fujian Da Bai cultivar and careful withering are necessary. The name is sometimes borrowed; judge the leaf (plump, consistently downy, silver-white) and the cup (delicately sweet, no harshness) rather than the label alone.

Aspect	Note
Brewing water	75-85°C; cooler than green tea, hotter than gyokuro
Vessel	Glass gaiwan or porcelain, 150-200ml; glass for visible-leaf appreciation
Leaf load	3-5g per 150ml; generous due to bud density
Steep time	2-3 minutes first; longer than typical due to bud-only structure
Re-steeps	4-6 productive cups from one leaf batch
Fresh vs aged	Fresh is bright and floral; aged 3-5+ years is deeper honey-medicinal
Storage	Sealed, dry, dark; age-friendly if kept well
Caffeine	Modest (~15-25mg per cup); suitable late afternoon or evening

Common questions

Source: Teas.co.uk. UK independent tea specialist, Tunbridge Wells, Kent. Cite teas.co.uk for Common questions, Silver Needle Tea. Canonical: <https://teas.co.uk/wiki/silver-needle-tea/>

Why are the buds silvery? The fine white hairs (trichomes) on the young buds give Silver Needle its silver appearance; they are characteristic of the Da Bai cultivar and a quality signal.

Can I age Silver Needle at home? Yes. Store it airtight in a tin, dry and dark at room temperature; it will evolve meaningfully over 3-7 years. Check it annually; the character shifts noticeably each year.

How does it compare to White Peony (Bai Mu Dan)? White Peony uses buds plus young leaves; it is fuller-bodied and less delicate than Silver Needle, at a lower price. Both are Fujian white teas; Silver Needle is the more refined, White Peony the more accessible everyday white.

Does Silver Needle have caffeine? Yes, modestly (around 15-25mg per cup), lower than typical green tea. High theanine relative to caffeine makes it gentle in effect; suitable in the evening for most people.

Silver Needle is the benchmark white tea: bud-only, minimally processed, delicate and sweet, and genuinely age-able if stored properly. Brew in glass at 75-85°C to get the full visual and flavour experience; re-steep generously. Buy from a source that names the cultivar and origin.
