

How to Pack a Flask of Earl Grey Rooibos (Without It Stewing)

From the Teas.co.uk wiki

A flask of tea on a long journey usually disappoints, and there is one main reason: the bags get left in. Sealed in a hot flask, they carry on brewing for hours, so by the time you pour a cup the tea is dark, stewed and bitter. The fix is simple. Brew it properly, then pull the bags out before you seal the flask.

Earl Grey rooibos is a good choice for this, as it is caffeine-free and the bergamot holds up well over a few hours. Brew it strong and hot in the flask, sweeten it while it is still hot if you take sugar, and carry any milk or lemon separately to add by the cup.
