

Caffeine-Free Chai Latte

From the Teas.co.uk wiki

Caffeine-free chai latte is the one to make in the evening, when a black-tea chai would keep you up. The trick is to build it on Teapigs Honeybush and Rooibos instead of black tea: both are naturally caffeine-free and tannin-free, so the cup comes out soft and rounded rather than brisk, while the whole spices simmered into the milk give it the proper chai backbone.

It is made the stovetop way, the same as any good chai. Simmer the temples and the whole spices, cardamom, pepper, ginger and cinnamon, in milk and water, strain, and stir in a little honey at the end. Rooibos is slower to give up its colour than black tea, so give it a full seven minutes.
