How to Brew Loose-Leaf Black Tea

From the teas.co.uk wiki

Brewing loose-leaf black tea is barely more work than a bag, and the cup is all the better for it. The simplest method needs no infuser at all: drop the leaves straight into the cup, pour over boiling water, give it four minutes, then decant the brew through a strainer into a second cup. That way the leaves are left behind and the tea cannot keep stewing past its best. A bamboo strainer like the Pattiya catches even the fine fragments and adds no taste of its own.

Drink it plain, or add a little sugar and a splash of milk to taste.
