Moroccan Mint Tea, Done Properly

From the teas.co.uk wiki

Moroccan mint tea is as much a custom as a drink: traditionally green tea and spearmint, served sweet and poured from a height so it gets a little foam on top. This bagged version makes a quick everyday cup of it.

It is meant to be sweet, so the sugar is not really optional in the traditional sense, though you can use less. If you have fresh mint, drop a sprig in with the bag, as it lifts the whole thing and brings it closer to how it is served across North Africa.
