Camomile Cake Glaze

From the teas.co.uk wiki

This is a simple water icing made with strong camomile tea in place of plain water, which gives it a soft, honeyed, faintly apple-like flavour. It is lovely spooned over a plain sponge or a lemon cake, where the gentle camomile note comes through without taking over.

The whole thing is just strong tea whisked into icing sugar, so the only knack is the consistency: thick enough to coat the back of a spoon, loose enough to drizzle. Add the tea a little at a time and you cannot go far wrong.
