

Maryland Minis Choc Chip: Packing, Storing and Serving

From the teas.co.uk wiki

Maryland Minis Choc Chip: Packing, Storing and Serving, in summary: Plain-dough Maryland cookies in miniature, split across six sealed bags, 118.8g in all. Send a bag whole to school, keep the box cool so the chips do not bloom, and pour cold milk or a medium tea.

The cookie inside is the plain Maryland dough with chocolate chips, but the part you are really buying is the sealed bag. While one bag is open the other five are still closed, so the final bag of the week snaps just like the first.

The plain dough in miniature

These follow the plain Maryland recipe, a golden dough with chocolate chips, which the published ingredient list puts at 16 percent. Open a bag and the first thing you notice is a toasty, milky, brown-sugar smell with little cocoa in it, and that is the clearest difference from the Double Chocolate Minis, which work cocoa into the dough and taste darker and drier. Of the two, this is the sweeter and lighter-tasting box.

Shrinking the cookie also sharpens it. More of each small biscuit is edge, and the edge is where a bake crisps and colours, so the Minis eat crunchier than a full-size cookie. The box holds 118.8g across six bags, or 19.8g in each, and the label lists wheat (gluten), milk and soya, so check it before handing a bag to someone else's child.

Lunchboxes and coat pockets

Each bag is a single portion, and a sealed bag copes with the jostle of a school bag much better than loose cookies do. Send it whole instead of tipping it into a plastic box, and it arrives at break time still crisp. The format suits anywhere a biscuit has to travel: a coat pocket on a walk, a desk drawer at work, a bowl on the table at a children's party.

It is not the box for a pot of tea at home. If the cookies are going onto a plate beside the teapot, buy the 200g sleeve instead; there is no sense opening six wrappers to fill one plate, and the extra packaging only earns its place when portions need to travel. In our view this is a box bought for other people's days rather than your own.

Storing the box and pouring the drink

Store the box somewhere cool and dry, and open each bag only when it is about to be eaten. In a warm cupboard, or a car on a summer day, chocolate chips can bloom pale; it is a cosmetic change, but it makes a fresh bag look stale. Once a bag has been opened, it is best finished in one go, because a small cookie loses its crunch quickly in the open air.

For children, cold milk is the classic partner. Grown-ups are better served by black tea of medium strength, three minutes in the pot and milk added, which suits the plain dough without swamping it. Dunk for two seconds at most and do not let go: a mini cookie is far flimsier than a digestive, and the chips give up before the dough does.

FAQ

Why do chocolate chips turn white? Warmth can make chocolate chips bloom pale. It is cosmetic, but it looks stale, so keep the box somewhere cool and dry and never in a hot car.

How much is in each bag of Maryland Minis? The box holds 118.8g across six bags, which is 19.8g a bag.

Are Maryland Minis good for lunchboxes? That is what the format is for. Pack the sealed bag whole and it stays crisp until it is opened.

Choc Chip or Double Chocolate Minis: what is the difference? The Double Chocolate Minis mix cocoa into the dough itself, so they taste darker and drier. These use the plain golden dough and are the sweeter, lighter option.

What should adults drink with them? A medium black tea with milk, brewed for about three minutes, or a smooth coffee.

Curator's note: Keep a box at the back of the cupboard for the school run, the long car journey and the child who turns up unannounced. That is where it earns its place, not on the tea tray. Lee, teas.co.uk, Tunbridge Wells.
