

McVitie's Mini Milk Chocolate Digestives: Five Bags, One Week

From the teas.co.uk wiki

McVitie's Mini Milk Chocolate Digestives: Five Bags, One Week, in summary: Five sealed 19g bags of small milk chocolate digestives. Shrinking the biscuit tips the balance towards chocolate, the bags keep them crisp away from home, and they are for eating beside a drink, not dunking.

A mini chocolate digestive is not just a small copy of the full-size one, because the smaller the biscuit, the bigger its share of chocolate. Seal that in a 19g bag and the familiar digestive is ready for a lunchbox, a desk drawer or a glovebox.

Why a smaller biscuit tastes more chocolatey

It comes down to shape rather than recipe. Shrink a round biscuit and its volume falls away faster than its surface does, so with the same thickness of coating each mini carries more chocolate for every gram of biscuit underneath. The chocolate also turns up sooner and more often, simply because you take more bites to get through the same weight.

Underneath is still the wheatmeal digestive crumb, which carries less sugar than most biscuit bases and gives a faintly savoury edge beneath the chocolate. That balance is why the minis sit comfortably next to an unsweetened cup of tea. They are the same milk chocolate digestive idea as our full-size twin pack, simply reshaped for a bag rather than a tin.

What five sealed bags are good for

The bags are the real product. An open sleeve of biscuits in a school bag or a desk drawer goes soft within a day or two, while a sealed bag keeps the crumb crisp until the moment it is torn open, and the bags are built to cope with a fortnight in a glovebox or drawer. Five bags cover a school week exactly, with none spare for the weekend.

Each bag is also a natural full stop. With a full-size pack the only limit is willpower; here the bag is empty after 19g and the decision has been made for you. For a household that wants chocolate digestives in the tin rather than in a lunchbox, the full-size Milk Chocolate Digestives twin pack is the better choice, and it dunks where these do not.

Serving them away from the teapot

These are not dunkers. A full-size digestive has an edge to hold and enough biscuit to survive a dip; a mini has neither, and once its chocolate softens there is nothing left to lift out of the cup. Eat them alongside the drink instead, and keep the dunking for the full-size rounds.

Because the minis travel, the drink often travels too. A flask of strong everyday tea, taken without sugar, stands up to the chocolate well, and at a desk with a pod machine a short espresso does the same job from the bitter side. On warm days keep the bags out of direct sun and away from a radiator, since milk chocolate softens quickly and a bag cannot stop that.

FAQ

Are mini chocolate digestives more chocolatey than normal ones? They taste it, because a smaller biscuit carries more coating for every gram of biscuit. The difference comes from the size of the biscuit, not from anything we know about the recipe.

How many bags come in a pack? Five sealed bags of 19g each, 95g altogether, which covers a school week with nothing spare.

Can you dunk mini digestives? Not really. There is no edge to hold and too little biscuit to survive the dip, so eat them beside the cup.

How long do the bags stay crisp? Sealed, they cope with a school bag, drawer or glovebox for a fortnight. Once a bag is open, finish it.

Where can I check the ingredients and allergens? On the current pack. We do not hold a published label for this pack size, so read the bag before it goes into a shared lunchbox.

Curator's note: Put one bag in each lunchbox and a flask of strong tea in the bag beside it. Nobody gets a soft biscuit and nobody eats the lot. Lee, teas.co.uk, Tunbridge Wells.
