Teapigs All Day Brew and Everyday Brew: The Same Tea?

From the teas.co.uk wiki

> All Day Brew and Everyday Brew, in short: They are not the same tea. On Teapigs' own site, All Day Brew is a blend of Kenyan and Ceylon black tea, while everyday brew is how Teapigs describes its English breakfast blend of Assam, Rwandan and Ceylon tea.

No, Teapigs All Day Brew and Everyday Brew are two different blends. All Day Brew is made from Kenyan and Ceylon leaves. Everyday Brew is the name Teapigs has used for its English breakfast blend, which the maker lists as Assam, Rwanda and Ceylon.

Two names, two blends

The names are close enough to cause confusion, and both are plain black teas meant for drinking through the day. But Teapigs sells them as separate products with separate ingredient lists.

We checked Teapigs' own shop on the day this page was reviewed. It listed a product called all day brew, in a 40 temple box. It listed no product titled everyday brew. Instead, its English breakfast tea page describes that blend as "our everyday brew".

What is in All Day Brew

Teapigs lists the ingredients as naturally caffeinated black tea leaves from Kenya and Ceylon. It describes the Kenyan leaf as the bold, bright part of the blend and the Ceylon as the smooth, mellow part.

The maker's directions are one tea temple per person in boiling water, brewed for three minutes or more. On Teapigs' site it comes in one size, 40 temples. We do not stock All Day Brew at teas.co.uk.

What is in Everyday Brew

Everyday Brew is Teapigs' take on English breakfast. The maker's English breakfast page lists naturally caffeinated black tea leaves from Assam, Rwanda and Ceylon, and describes the taste as balanced, malty and zesty.

The brewing advice is the same: one temple per person, boiling water, three minutes or more. Teapigs notes that whole leaves take a little longer to brew. Our guide to Teapigs tea temples explains the bag.

This is the one we stock. The box on our shelf is labelled Teapigs Everyday Brew and holds 15 temples. Blends can be adjusted over time, so the box you receive is the final word on what is inside.

Was Everyday Brew renamed?

We cannot say, and we will not guess. Teapigs' site today uses english breakfast as the product name and everyday brew as a description of the same blend. We found no current statement from Teapigs explaining how the two names relate over time.

What we can say is narrower. On the evidence of Teapigs' own listings, All Day Brew is not a new name for Everyday Brew. Teapigs lists it alongside English breakfast as a different blend from different origins.

How they compare with Yorkshire Tea

Most people weighing up a Teapigs breakfast blend are comparing it with their usual box. Yorkshire Tea Original is the obvious yardstick. Taylors describes it as a blend of 10 to 20 black teas, with African teas for liveliness and Indian teas for strength.

	All Day Brew	Everyday Brew (English breakfast)	Yorkshire Tea Original
Maker	Teapigs	Teapigs	Taylors of Harrogate
Teas the maker names	Kenya and Ceylon	Assam, Rwanda and Ceylon	10 to 20 black teas from Africa and India
Format	Tea temples	Tea temples, or loose	Tea bags, or loose
Maker's brew time	3 minutes or more	3 minutes or more	See the box
At teas.co.uk	Not stocked	Stocked as Everyday Brew	Stocked

The practical differences are format and cost. Teapigs sells tea temples in small boxes. Yorkshire sells big boxes of standard bags and works out far cheaper per cup. Our head to head of Teapigs Everyday Brew and Yorkshire Tea goes further, and the best English breakfast tea bags sets both among their rivals.

What we stock

At teas.co.uk you will find Everyday Brew in the 15 temple box, plus Teapigs Decaf English Breakfast. For the comparison cup, we stock Yorkshire Tea Original in several sizes. Common questions

Is Teapigs Everyday Brew the same as Teapigs English breakfast?

Teapigs' own English breakfast page calls that blend "our everyday brew", so the two names point to the same style of tea. The box we stock is labelled Everyday Brew.

Does All Day Brew contain caffeine?

Yes. Teapigs describes both All Day Brew and its English breakfast blend as naturally caffeinated black tea.

Can I buy All Day Brew from teas.co.uk?

Not at present. The closest Teapigs tea we stock is Everyday Brew.
