Elderflower is the British hedgerow's most distinctive aromatic, a delicate, lightly sweet, almost grape like floral note that defines summer in the UK countryside. The flowers of the elder tree (Sambucus nigra) are dried for tea, infused for cordial, made into wine, and used in herbal medicine. The cup is gentle, sweet, naturally caffeine free, and one of the most quintessentially British herbal teas.

The plant

Elder (Sambucus nigra) is a small to medium tree native across Europe and the British Isles. It produces:

- Cream white flower clusters in late spring and early summer (May June). The "elderflowers" used for tea, cordial, and wine.
- Dark purple berries in autumn (August September). The "elderberries" used for syrups, jams, and immune support products.

The wood, leaves, and bark are mildly toxic when fresh, only the flowers and ripe cooked berries are safe for consumption.

Where elderflower fits in British herbalism

Elderflower has a long British folk medicine tradition:

- Cold and flu. Hot elderflower tea with honey is a classic UK cold remedy. Some traditional sources combine it with peppermint and yarrow.
- Hayfever. Anecdotal traditional use. Some weak clinical evidence.
- Skin conditions. Traditional use as a face wash and bath additive.
- Diuretic. Mild traditional diuretic effect.

The clinical evidence for these traditional uses is mostly weak, none rises to the level of solid trial data. Elderflower tea is a pleasant gentle drink with mild possible benefits, not a treatment.

- Dried elderflower (the dominant ingredient)
- Sometimes blended with: chamomile, lemon balm, peppermint, lemongrass, rosehip, hibiscus
- Pure elderflower teas exist; blends are more common in mainstream UK retail

Common elderflower blends

- Elderflower + lemon balm. Calming, citrusy.
- Elderflower + chamomile. Sleep leaning blend.
- Elderflower + echinacea. Cold and flu blend.
- Elderflower + apple. Fruity, sweet, family friendly.
- Elderflower + rosehip. Bright, vitamin C contributing.
- Pukka Elderberry & Echinacea. Immune positioned blend.

How to brew

1. 1 tea bag per 200ml (or 2 tsp dried elderflower for loose).

2. Just boiled water (~95°C).
3. Steep 5-7 minutes. Cover the cup or pot, the volatile aromatic compounds escape as steam.
4. Drink black, with honey, or with a slice of lemon.
5. Excellent cold brewed for summer.

Foraging elderflower (briefly)

Elderflower is one of the easier wild ingredients to forage in the UK. Three rules:

1. Identify correctly. Elder has cream white umbel flowers, opposite leaf pairs with serrated edges, and pithy stems. Don't confuse with the toxic dwarf elder (Sambucus ebulus), dwarf elder is herbaceous, not woody, and sits closer to ground level.
2. Pick on a dry sunny morning. The aromatic oils are at their peak. Don't pick after rain.
3. Use within 24 hours fresh, or dry for storage. Spread on a clean tray in a warm dry room; flowers are dried in 4-7 days.

Foraged elderflower has a fresher, more aromatic character than commercial dried, but commercial is convenient and the difference is modest.

Elderflower cordial (the British classic)

If you forage or buy fresh elderflower, the traditional UK use is cordial:

1. 20-30 fresh elderflower heads
2. 1.5kg sugar
3. 1.5L boiling water
4. 2 lemons (sliced)
5. 50g citric acid

Combine in a large bowl. Cover. Stand 24-48 hours, stirring occasionally. Strain through muslin. Bottle. Refrigerate up to 6 weeks (or freeze concentrate for longer storage). Dilute 1:5 with water for drinking.

FAQ

What does elderflower tea taste like? Lightly sweet, floral, slightly grape like aromatic. Gentle and refreshing.

Is elderflower tea good for colds? Traditional UK cold remedy with weak clinical evidence. The warm hydration is genuinely helpful; the herbal effect is modest.

Can I make elderflower cordial at home? Yes, fresh elderflowers + sugar + lemon + citric acid. 24-48 hours infusion.

Is it caffeine free? Yes, completely.

Pregnancy safe? Generally yes in moderation.

Curator's note: elderflower is one of those ingredients that genuinely tastes of the British countryside in early summer. The cordial tradition is a national treasure; the tea is the year round version. Pick or buy a bag of dried elderflower, brew strong with a slice of lemon, and you've got a proper hedgerow drink. Aspect	The plain read
What it is	Infusion of dried elder blossom; a hedgerow herbal, not a tea leaf
Taste	Light, floral, muscat-like; gentle and slightly sweet
Caffeine	None: a true all-day and evening cup
Traditional use	Folk use for colds and congestion; comfort, not a proven cure
Brew	Full boil, 5+ min covered, to hold the volatile florals
Caution	Use flowers, not raw green/unripe berries or bark

Elderflower tea is comfort and a pleasant, aromatic, caffeine-free cup rather than a treatment; this is general information, not medical advice, and it is the flowers that are used, not raw elderberries, leaves or bark.
