Formal afternoon tea is one of Britain's most recognisable cultural exports, finger sandwiches, scones with clotted cream and jam, fine pastries, and quality tea served in fine china at hotels, tea rooms, and stately homes. The tradition dates from 1840 (Anna, 7th Duchess of Bedford). Modern UK afternoon tea is a hospitality industry worth millions, with bookings at top venues 6-12 months ahead.

Origin (1840)

Anna, 7th Duchess of Bedford, found herself hungry in mid afternoon. She began having a small meal of tea and pastries between lunch and dinner. The practice spread among aristocratic friends, then to the broader upper class.

Late Victorian (1870s-90s)

Afternoon tea became a formal social occasion. Hotels, tea rooms, and private houses developed elaborate traditions.

20th century

Afternoon tea moved from private to public, hotels (The Ritz, The Savoy, Claridge's) became destinations. The afternoon tea hospitality tradition became globally recognisable.

Modern revival

The 1990s-2010s saw a revival of formal afternoon tea. Hotels, restaurants, and dedicated tea rooms now offer extensive afternoon tea menus.

- Battenberg cake.
- Macarons.
- Fruit tartlet.
- Eclair.
- Lemon cake.
- Profiterole.

Hotel afternoon teas often have signature pastries.
